

• Josh Hart said,

Please note: 1) Josh del Sol did not "start Stop Smart Meters!" as the first comment suggests. I started Stop Smart Meters! in 2010 with other activists from the Santa Cruz, CA area. 2) Note that Mr. del Sol does nothing to refute the above false attribution, echoing years of taking credit for others' (and particularly my) work. 3) Mr. Del Sol's "Notice of Liability" project is nothing more than a re-packaging of the discredited "sovereign citizen" movement, with fancy graphics and special effects, designed to part you from your money using false hope, and false claims. 4) As we say in our post on this so-called "Inpower movement", "buyer beware!"

<https://stopsmartmeters.org/2017/08/23/the-emperor-wears-no-clothes-fake-back-your-power/>
Josh HART Director <http://StopSmartMeters.org>

• Josh Hart said,

There is nothing wrong with holding criminals accountable in writing. The question is - who is going to ultimately hold them accountable if political and judicial systems continue to be corrupted by the industries they are meant to hold in check? Unless the answer is "us" then such dogma only serves to empower the state and those who oppress us.

• Josh Hart said,

Josh del Sol says "For 5 years, the method of petitions, appeals, even in some cases begging for our rights... simply has not worked." Nowhere does it mention the few successes we have had with civil disobedience, organizing, and direct action, combined with grassroots political pressure and savvy legal actions. It's like this history does not even exist in the TBYP world because Josh is not comfortable with street protesting and believes direct action doesn't "look pretty." I think it looks beautiful: <https://stopsmartmeters.org/direct-action/>